Space of the square was returned to the citizens in the form in which it should be, if it was not commercialized during the last two decades.

The citizens who have seen kiosks instead of square for more than 20 years and perceived it as a constant have ceased to put up with it. Such small but important victories give the citizens an opportunity to feel that this is their city and that they are the owners here. This is a good example of how it might be different. We believe that it will become a good case for imitation for squares at the metro exits in the sleeping areas with their labyrinths of kiosks.
