

CAMPUS WITHOUT WALLS

The contemporary campus isn't defined by its walls, but by its connections with the surroundings. With this project JUUL | FROST Arkitekter rethought campus in the light of the original Latin notion of 'campus': 'open field'. With the new University Square the university building was opened up towards the city with a new urban, inviting and vibrant entrance - an arrival point, that connects campus with the city. Örebro campus have been transformed from an 'academic village' to a 'university hub' - a campus that isn't defined by its borders but the exchange with the city and its firms.

Breaking down solid walls that traditionally surround Universities - and instead open it up towards the world - with the urban space in front as the connection between city and campus.
