The previous site was inaccessible, grey and dominated by cars and parking lots. Due to its vast size the complex created a gap in the neighbourhood.

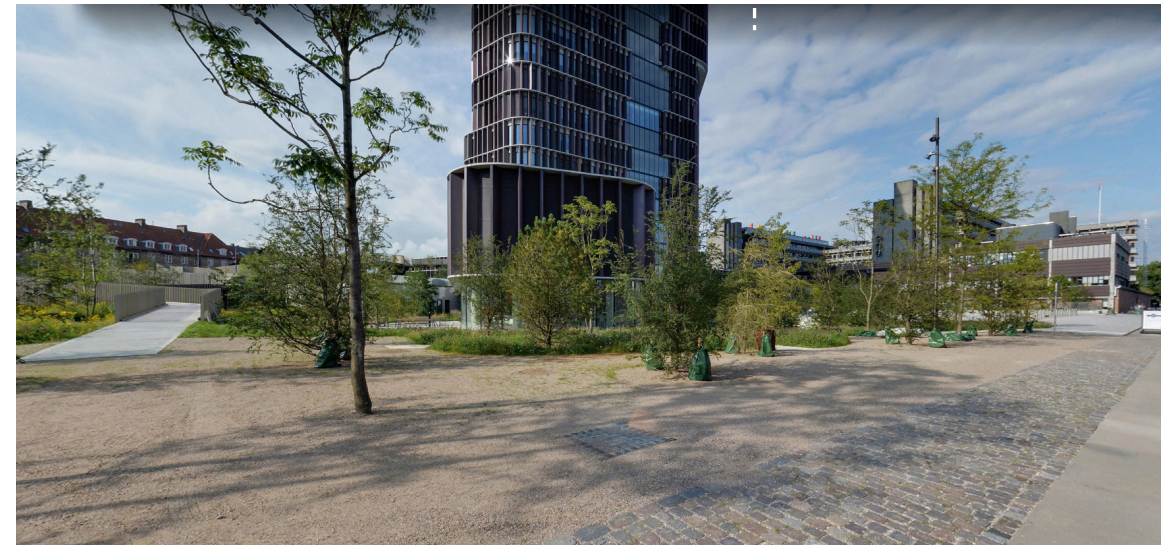

The campus area was bordered by walls, fences and bars. The recreative qualities were few and only directed towards the students and researchers.

The new SUND Nature Park has opened up the site and works as a green heart in the dense neighborhood.

The new nature park is open, inviting and connects the neighbourhood in new ways, both mentally and physically.
