For a period of one month, the area of the street generally intended for vehicles became an area for foot traffic. The void between the two distinctively urban street fronts was occupied by stalls marked by their wooden volumes and a transparent surface. When the first signs of twilight, the underground parking lot undergoes a transformation as the lights are switched on inside the wooden structures, illuminating the forest made of fir laths.