This small urban green space is located at the corner of one of the city’s largest boulevard and residential street, in the wider area of the city center. In Novi Sad, as a small city of 300,000 inhabitants, the mentioned boulevard, the boulevard of Oslabodjenja, represents the first major urban change after the Second World War. Bulevar Oslabodjenja stretches between the Railway Station in the north to the Most Slobode (Freedom Bridge) in the south and is about 3 kilometers long. Citizens of Novi Sad use the term “Bulevar” to mark not only this street but also its wider surroundings, so this name also marks the informal city district in Novi Sad.
