The Common Space

A Common space is activated by, and through, the practices of those occupying it in a given moment. The picture shows a meeting between inhabitants and architects symbolising the power of collectively discuss and invent a common that transcends a current physical space. The project is not to simply mime the existent but from it, invent new possibilities. Identifying it as common space does not mean an opposition to public space, rather, a different layer of signification added to the same area. Here what is being shown is the discussion of that possibility from a very concrete object that shelters the process.
