WHY PUBLIC SPACE?

With ideas of equality, plurality and progress constituting part of its very foundations, the European city is today facing new challenges arising from its exponential growth and increasing social and cultural complexity. Some of society’s main problems are radically expressed in the city’s public spaces. Segregation, rampant construction, homogenisation and privatisation of urban space are some of the phenomena that are putting into jeopardy the ideal of the open, plural and democratic community that has always been so distinctive of the European city.

WHAT IT IS THE PRIZE?

The European Prize for Urban Public Space is a biennial competition that aims to recognize and encourage the creation, recovery and improvement of public space in the understanding that the state of public space is a clear indicator of the civic and collective health of our cities.

The European Prize for Urban Public Space is an initiative of the Centre of Contemporary Culture of Barcelona (CCCB). It was established following the exhibition “The Reconquest of Europe”, which was held in the CCCB in 1999, in order to offer testimony to the process of rehabilitation of public spaces that has been occurring in many European cities. Over the last decade, the Prize has become known throughout Europe and has been gaining institutional support to the point that it now constitutes a gauge of the main concerns and initiatives in European urban planning.

The aim of the Prize is to recognize and foster the public character of urban spaces and their capacity for fostering social cohesion. While acknowledging the ambiguities inherent in the notion of public space, this Prize – the only one of its kind in Europe – is distinctive in both recognizing and promoting a public space that is at once public (open and universally accessible) and urban. The Prize, in highlighting the relational and civic aspects of the typically urban space, thus differs from other initiatives that are focused on the figure of the architect, and from awards given for landscape-centred projects.
ABOUT US

In the years since its inception, a number of European institutions have joined the project, which is presently co-organized by The Architecture Foundation (London), the Architekturzentrum Wien (Vienna), the Cité de l’Architecture et du Patrimoine (Paris), the Nederlands Architectuurinstituut (Rotterdam) and the Suomen Rakennustaitteena Museo (Helsinki) and the Deutsches Architekturmuseum (Frankfurt). Over the last five occasions on which the Prize has been offered, it has consolidated in institutional terms and this has enabled it to expand its geographic scope. In 2010, 303 projects from 32 European countries (in comparison with the 81 projects from 14 countries in 2000) were entered for the Prize, which might therefore be seen as a window on to the transformation of public spaces in Europe, and a gauge of the main concerns of European cities.

CHARACTERISTICS

The Prize has many distinguishing features. First, it is conceded to both the architect and the branch of public administration (council or political representative) that has taken the political decision to effectuate the intervention and, frequently, to guarantee its funding as well. Second, is the honorific nature of the Prize. Third, the Prize is not so much concerned, at least not uniquely or as a priority, with large-scale urban planning operations, as with interventions – great or small – of what might be called urban surgery that aims, above all, to improve the lives of citizens. Priority is given, then, to architecture with a social vocation rather than to that with an aesthetic or spectacular accent. This enables us to situate architects who are as yet unknown, or just starting to be known, alongside the great names of the world of architecture. Fourth, the Prize is distinctive in its clearly European vocation. While respecting local particularities, it is concerned to pay tribute to the common features of urban planning interventions throughout the geographic space of Europe, and to endorse and make known a certain European identity in the domain of architecture.

ARCHIVE

The majority of the projects that have been presented since the Prize was first offered may be viewed today in the European Archive of Urban Public Space http://www.publicspace.org/eng/archive. They are complemented with the Urban Library, which consists of a collection of texts on the city and urban issues that the CCCB has been engaged with through lectures and exhibitions since its very beginnings. The Prize is organized within the framework of the CCCB’s larger, permanent and multidisciplinary programme on cities and public space. It represents a privileged platform of 451 projects of transformation of space in 295 European cities, besides offering a good measure of critical reflection from the leading experts in the field of public space.
MEMBERS OF JURY OF THE 2012 PRIZE

The Jury members are the directors of the award-giving institutions and the President and Secretary represent the CCCB.

Josep Llinàs, CCCB

Escofet 1886, a leading industry in the architectural and pre-cast concrete market, manufactures and supplies top-of-the range high-quality products with the aim of serving urban planning and architecture. Its brand-name and logotype represent a long trajectory in its creative strategy of contributing additional value to construction in the city and in shaping the urban landscape. Continuous innovation, development of new products and definition of innovative typologies of urban elements as conceptual and material support are the basic principles of its industrial and creative activity.

From the hydraulic mosaic of modernism to the Lungo Mare of the contemporary city, and in its construction of facades, Escofet has been at the cutting edge of innovation with different materials derived from cement.

The value of the Escofet brand-name is the value of its human and intellectual capital, together with the historical accumulation of experience reflected in its professional history. Its pioneering strategy of anticipation in its interaction with designers and planners, its leadership in the generation of a new universal vocabulary of urban elements and its painstaking logistical service have been key factors in its international expansion.
