The CCCB announces the 12th edition of the European Prize for Urban Public Space, which is open for entries from 5 March to 16 April 2024.

The Prize, the only one of its kind in Europe, promotes debate about urban responses to challenges such as climate emergency, the increase in inequalities and the impact of technological transformations. Exceptionally, this year it incorporates Seafronts, in response to the particular vulnerability of coastal cities to climate change.

The president of this year’s jury is Beth Galí, a Barcelona-born architect, urban planner, landscape architect and industrial designer.

Organized by the CCCB, the Prize involves the collaboration of a network of 10 architecture and urban planning institutions, and over 50 experts from across the continent.

The Centre de Cultura Contemporània de Barcelona (CCCB) announces the call for entries for the 12th European Prize for Urban Public Space. This honorary biennial competition, which since 2000 has acknowledged the best interventions in the creation, transformation and recovery of public space in European cities, will distinguish works carried out between 2022 and 2023 in its general category. The call is open from 5 March to 16 April.

The Prize is the only one in Europe dedicated to public space, and is awarded to both the project designers and developers. Its main purpose is to reflect the role that issues such as shortages, inequalities, mobility, migrations, or climate emergency and the impact of new technologies have on the urban design of public space; and to be an observatory of good practices that proposes solutions for a future in which cities will play a leading role in defining society’s evolution.
Category: Seafronts

In the present-day context of climate crisis, in which coastal cities are laboratories for rethinking the city and the way of inhabiting it in the face of the challenges posed by rising sea levels and extreme climate phenomena, this year the Prize incorporates Seafronts into its usual categories. The jury will evaluate works centring on the transformation, recovery or creation of seafronts carried out between 2019 and 2023.

Organization and Planned Calendar

From all the projects presented in the general category, the international jury will select 25, of which five will be the finalists of the edition, along with another five from the Seafronts category. All of them will form part of the Prize’s Archive. The finalists will present their work at an event open to the public to be held on 28 October at the CCCB. After the jury’s deliberation, the winning works in both categories will be announced at the awards ceremony on 29 October.

International jury

The international jury of this edition is made up of renowned professionals from all over Europe:

President and representative of the CCCB
Beth Galí, architect, urban planner, landscape architect and industrial designer. She has taught at the Laboratori d’Urbanisme of the Barcelona School of Architecture-ETSAB, and been guest professor in Lausanne (Switzerland), Delft (Netherlands) and Harvard (USA).

The History of a Prize with a European and Social Vocation

The European Prize for Urban Public Space naturally finds its place in the European city, which, despite its diversity, shares common historical elements such as human scale, compact design and mixed uses. In this idea of a European city, public space plays a key role in bringing people together, with all its political, economic and social values, which are inseparable from a physical design that accommodates and makes them possible.

In the course of its 24 years of history and 11 editions, the Prize has received 2,507 proposals, and given 20 awards and 35 special mentions. The winning projects include interventions as varied and important as Barking Town Square (2008), a new civic space for a suburban district in east London that, after years of marginality, sought to salvage its past from a lost identity and project a meeting space for a new community. The open-air library in the German city of Magdeburg (2010), where, in a participatory process, the residents of a socially depressed neighbourhood got a library built with the prefabricated parts of a demolished building. The remodelling of the old port of Marseille, France (2014), an intervention that frees up the quays of obstacles and vehicles, combining the presence of leisure boats with public access and enjoyment for citizens. The recovery of the irrigation ditches of the thermal vegetable allotments of Caldes de Montbui, Spain (2016), which reactivated agricultural activity and created a network of pedestrian paths. The renovation of Skanderbeg Square in Tirana (2018), a nerve centre of the Albanian capital and a symbolic place for the entire country that has been remodelled to promote and highlight its diversity, and, with the planting of a belt green, has become a starting point for the renaturalization of the city centre. And the restoration of the Catharijnesingel (2022), an intervention that removes road traffic and recovers water to renaturalize and provide pedestrian and cyclist accessibility to a new public space for the city of Utrecht, in the Netherlands.
The Prize's Archive, an Online Resource

The European Archive of Urban Public Space, a searchable online resource, collects the best works submitted since the competition began. With 382 projects in almost 200 cities, it is both witness to and observatory of the construction and evolution of public spaces throughout Europe.

El Centre de Cultura Contemporània de Barcelona (CCCB)

The CCCB is a multidisciplinary arts centre dedicated to exploring the big themes of contemporary society in different languages and formats, with an extensive programme that includes major thematic exhibitions, cycles of talks and literary meetings, audiovisual screenings and festivals. Since its beginnings, the CCCB has promoted reflection on contemporary cities, understanding that they are key places for the transformations and challenges of today's world.
