The field on which the action takes place is enclosed by a defensive perimeter, closely distributed and with defensive towers that form the walls, all of which have been reinforced in recent interventions by the addition of new defensive towers. This is the characteristic feature of the place, which will be accentuated when it comes to present it in terms of form and content.

All around the same actions have been carried out, to clean up the area and restore the original appearance. New buildings are being supported with the walls, which were previously hidden from view, adding a new level of interest and enhancement to the urban fabric that clearly identifies this area.

The proposal for the design and protection of architectural and archaeological elements occurs in a way that is both coherent and harmonious with the existing context. It involves the development of a new building located outside the old town. The new building will be a part of the Orange Museum, which will be located outside the old town. The new building will be designed to complement the Orange Museum, which is located outside the old town. The new building will be designed to complement the Orange Museum, which is located outside the old town.

The plan for the new building is to create a new building that will be connected to the Orange Museum. The new building will be designed to complement the Orange Museum, which is located outside the old town. The new building will be designed to complement the Orange Museum, which is located outside the old town. The new building will be designed to complement the Orange Museum, which is located outside the old town.

The new building will be a part of the Orange Museum, which is located outside the old town. The new building will be designed to complement the Orange Museum, which is located outside the old town. The new building will be designed to complement the Orange Museum, which is located outside the old town.