

Parklet is an extension of the pedestrian zone, converting a parking lot into a public space for people. On one hand, it is an attempt to show how much public space a car takes. And on the other hand, it is an intention to create conditions for socialization and relaxation of people. The project goal is to experiment in space, to gain the social effects of the alternative use of parking lots.

Parklets are being constantly used by the pedestrians and cyclists. They are popular among the people of different social groups and they make the conditions for interaction. The installation of new facilities has strongly revived the area. Because of this project we have received an opportunity to start an active discussion with the citizens of Ivano-Frankivsk about the urban space problems. And one of the biggest successes of the project is that the community was created, which continues working on urban issues and initiates their own projects.
